r'L-CIO Neutral in U.S. Voting But Locals Left Free to Choose

By Jack Fuller and Peter Milius

WASHINGTON, July 19 (WP). -Bowing to AFL-CIO President Seorge Meany's wishes, the labor rganization's Executive Council toted today to remain neutral in this year's presidential race.
This meant that the national organization of the AFL-CIO would not endorse either Sen. George McGovern or President Nixon, which represents a blow to the Democratic nominee's efforts to win labor's support.

However, the 27-3 vote still left it up to individual member unions whether to support a candidate or remain neutral in the campaign. "I will not endorse, I will not support and I will not vote for Richard Nixon as President," the 77-year-old Mr. Meany told news-men after the Executive Council's

"I will not endorse, I will not support and I will not vote for Beorge McGovern for President." The crusty old labor veteran vould not spell out his opposition b Sen. McGovern, except to say. We don't think he's good material for labor."

Eagleton's Effort The council action followed a last-minute effort by the Democratic vice-presidential nomince, Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, to win a delay in the vote. He had called nine of his acquaintances on the 35-member council and asked them to try to postpone the vote. Sen. Eagleton, it was learned yesterday, also tried for two days to contact Mr. Meany, but got no further than his secretary.

Mr. Meany said the three dissenters on the council were pres-idents Jerry Wurf of the Amer-ican Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees; Paul Jennings of the International Union of Electrical Workers; and A.F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers. The three had already announced their support of Sen. McGovern.

Other unions that have endorsed Sen. McGovern or indicated that they would include the Under Way Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the printing pressmen, the lithographers, and the American Newspaper Gulld.

The nation's two largest labor unions not belonging to the AFL-CIO are the Teamsters, who have endorsed Mr. Nixon, and the United Auto Workers, whose president, Leonard Woodcock, has endorsed Sen. McGovern. Mr. Meany said that individual AFL-CIO unions would be free to support any candidate they chose or to remain neutral. But he said all of the AFL-CIO's political funds would be funneled into Senste and House campaigns to seek election of congresamen friendly to labor.

Changed Views Reminded that he had said a year ago that the most important thing this year was to oust Mr. Nixon, Mr. Meany replied that he has changed his view "because a man by the name of George McGovern got the Democratic presidential nom-

Since the May 2 meeting, there has been the mining of North Vietnamese ports, the summit meeting in Moscow, Soviet President Nikolai V. Podgorny's visit to Hanol, Mr. Klasinger's four-day visit to Peking and the resumption last Thursday of the plenary negotiating sessions. The Nixon administration has told newsmen there were some signs that North Vietnam was ready to resume the Paris nego-tiations with a new and "re-sponsive" attitude. Mr. Kissinger told reporters at San Clemente Calif., recently that he was hopeful about the resumed talks, but not-optimistic.

The chief purpose of Mr. Kissinger's visit today could have been to find out whether the Communists are willing to separate the military from the political settlement.

Mr. The and Mr. Thuy have hinted that they might be willing to consider a military settlement first and a political settlement later, something they have not been willing to do in the past. Their attitude today must have suggested to Mr. Klasinger that

Next Step in Communications—Muons

ARGONNE, III., July 19 (AP-DJ),-A U.S. government scientist has developed the prototype of a communications system that transmits signals via ghost-like atomic particles that can pass through solid objects such as buildings. The system holds the promise of becoming the third artificial method of communication. The first was electric current (the telegraph) and the second was electromagnetic waves (the telephone and television). This third method comes from the ability of very light atomic particles to travel in a straight line by simply plowing through objects in their

One of these particles is called the muon. Physicist Richard C. Arnold has found that by using a stream of muons tt is possible to send signals—voice, pictures and teletype, for example—over about 12 miles in a built-up area. He also believes that the earth's magnetic field could be used to guide the ghostly muons over a much wider area—thus making global communications possible.

Mr. Arnold, a researcher at the Atomic Energy Commission's Argonne laboratory, reports on his new communications system in the latest edition of Science magazine. The system, observes, provides an alternative over short distances to microwave communications and "might compete" with satellites over long distances.

The muon is one of the more sphemeral members of the vast "zoo" of particles within the atom. Together with an even more ghostly particle called the neutrino, which can pass through the earth itself, it is carried to earth aboard cosmic rays, the mysterious radiation that arrives from inter-

The muon is produced when the meson, the "give" that holds the atom's nucleus together, begins to decay. The muon 'lives' for only about two-millionths of a second before decaying itself and producing an electron. During its lifetime the muon can travel over long distances.

'Shopper's Guide' to Surgery Kraft Reports Cites Unneeded Operations From Hanoi

WASHINGTON, July 19 (WP). coming increasingly into the Pennsylvania Insurance Commissioner Herbert S. Denenberg has asserted that U.S. doctors perform at least 2 million unneeded operations a year. In a telephone interview Monday, he called his estimate of 2 million unnecessary operations a year "conservative," and said this surgery costs the U.S. public millions of dollars as well as unneeded deaths.

ever, some experts said that what is happening in Peking, Moscow and elsewhere, as well as in the military arens, may be more significant than what may have been said in Paris today. The meeting was the 14th in a series of secret talks involving Mr. Kissinger dating back to Aug. 4, 1969.

'Something New'

There was no way of determining whether Mr. Kissinger had met Mr. Tho's demand—made upon his arrival from Hanol last Saturday that the United States come up with "something new" as the price for resuming the eccret talks.

Some observers interpreted Mr. Tho's formulation as a tactical maneuver designed to re-inforce Hanoi'e consistent stand that its own peace proposals alone were valid and that the United States must accept them if there is to be a negotiated settlement of the war.

However, if the secret talks are to prove fruitful the United States expected to go beyond its May 8 offer to end its bombing and naval blockade of North Vietnam in return for a cease-fire and the return of American prisoners of

The rapidity of the announcement contrasted with the days and in most cases months which elansed before official confirmation of past secret meetings.

If past practice holds true, the meeting took place in a suburban Paris house provided by the French government. The way for the meeting was prepared when the United States ended its 10-week boycott of the semipublic peace conference and participated in the 150th session last Thursday.

North Vietnam had insisted on resumption of the stalemated formal conference as the price for new secret talks which the United States is convinced alone can make meaningful progress towards a negotiated peace.

It was not considered unusual that Ambassador William J. Porpeace talks delegation, was not present even though Mr. Thuy, his opposite number, participated in the discussions.

In Mr. Kissinger's previous meetings with the North Vietnamese neither Mr. Porter nor his predecessors during the Nixca administration—Henry Cabot Lodge and Devid K. E. Bruce—participated. However. President Nixon revealed in November, 1969, that Mr. Lodge had conducted a fruitless series of 11 secret talks in a ecparate exercise with the North Vietnamese, most of which took place before Mr. Kissinger's first such meeting. Mr. Bruce beld a single secret meeting with the North Victnamese in 1970.

Last January Mr. Nixon revealed the existence of Mr. Kissinger's first 12 meetings with the North Vietnamese. Some of the meetings took place with both Mr. Tho and Mr. Thuy, others with Mr. Thuy alone. Mr. Nixon made it clear that the breakdown of the eccret talks last fall was in part caused by the absence of Mr. Tho, who in American eyes alone has the authority to talk for the Hanol leadership.

No details of Mr. Kissinger's travel route have ever been of-ficially disclosed. The French government has ensured a total blackout. Mr. Kissinger is be-lieved to land at a military airfield in the Paris area. Meanwhile, diplomats put finishing touches on their prepared epeeches to be delivered at the semi-public conference session tomorrow morning. American sources said the delegation had "not yet reached any definitive conclusions" about slightly rephrased North Vietnamese definitions of the American role in the purely political aspects of a settlement. Mr. Thuy last week stressed that the United States must over-allow the Vietnamete themselves to work out a new government. The Communists still support the now more than year-old Viet Cong plan calling for an Amer-ican deadline for total troop withdrawal, the immediate res-Ignation of Mr. Thieu and setting up of a provisional coalition gov-

Jackson Calls Administration 'Dishonest' on ABM Issue

By George C. Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 19 (WP). -Conservative Democratic Senator Henry Jackson, of Washington, charged yesterday that the Nixon administration is being "dishonest in leading the American people to believe" that an anti-ballistic missile defense around the Minuteman missile base at Grand Forks, N.D., would add to their security.

Sen Jackson's charge came as he cross-examined Gerard C. Smith, director of the U.S. Arms Control Agency, on the agree-ment Mr. Smith negotiated with the Soviet Union to limit land and sea-based missiles.

"I'm appalled," said Sen, Jackson to newsmen after his ques-tioning of Mr. Smith, "that he doesn't have the answers on the most important matter ever brought before the Senate as far as strategic arms are concerned." Mr. Smith did give answers to most of the 25 written questions posed by Sen. Jackson on the strategic arms limitation talks agreement. But Sen. Jackson complained that the responses were incomplete and did not reveal the full extent of any U.S.-Soviet unwritten under-standings. "They have to ex-plain what's involved in this," said Sen, Jackson of the Nixon administration.

The senator said he would not make his own decision whether to vote for the accords until after he had obtained fuller explanations, Chairman John Stennis of the Senate Armed Services Committee called Sen Jackson's questions "excellent" during yesterday's meetings.

Only 100 Missiles On the anti-ballistic-missile question, Sen. Jackson told Mr. Smith that protecting the Grand

Smith's Reply

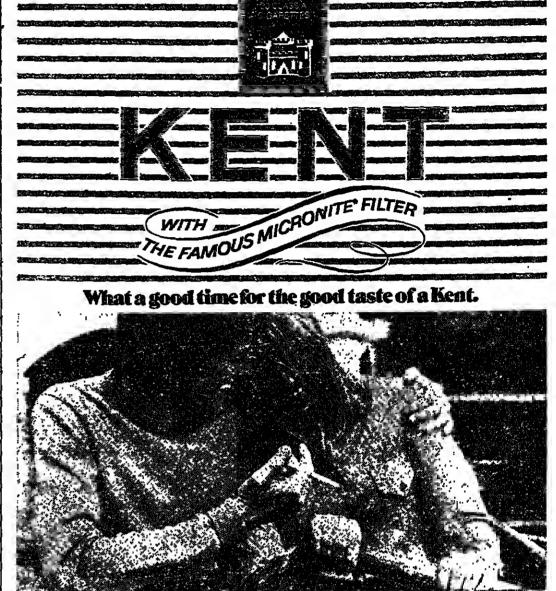

Mr. Smith, in answering Sen. Jackson, said the 100 interceptors allowed under the Moscow arms agreement "will protect a number of ICBMs [intercontinental ballistic missiles in that field" at Grand Forks.

Jackson had proposed here during the negotiations in Moscow that each side install four ABM sites to protect its offensive missiles, arguing this would help stabilize the balance of terror.

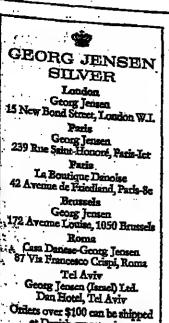

Mr. Smith said the Russians had expressed concern that putting a U.S. missile defense at two or four sites "would be the kernel for regional, if not national, deployment" of an ABM

Goran Gentele, 54, Successor To Bing as Director of Met

Gran Gentele, 54, who was to have begun his first season as director of the Metropolitan Opera this September, was killed yesterday in an automobile crash in Sardinia. The crash also claimed the lives of two of his daughters.

Mr. Gentele's wife, Marie, and another daughter, Janet, 27, were reported in fairly good condition today in a hospital. The dead children were Beatrice, 15, and Anna. 21.

Even before his first season began, Mr. Gentele had made an auspicious start on what must be one of the toughest jobs in the musical world: He created an atmosphere of excited antichys sophisticated and cynical musical establishment, and he successfully—and quietly—negotiated labor contracts with the Met's 14 tough

Mr. Gentele said he hoped to bring Ingmar Bergman to the Met as a director, that he planned to encourage informal attire at the opera and that one of his most important goals was to "Americanize" the venerable opera company.

"Why should it be," he once asked, "that so many United States singers must fly to the big opera houses of Europe while the singers of Europe are flying here?" A more American Met, Mr. Gentele said, might persuade Congress that opera is a national responsibility. He made no secret of the fact that government subsidy was one of his principal long-term aims.

Mr. Gentele, who was born and educated in Stockholm, served as director of Stockholm's Royal Opera House from 1963 through 1971. In his earlier days, he directed plays for Stockholm's Royal Dramatic Theater. But until his appointment to the Met, his only work outside Europe had been at Montreal's Expo 67, where his Stockholm company staged productions of "Tristan," "The Masked Ball" and "The Rake's Progress," the last directed by his friend Mr. Bergman.

Russians Go Home!

withdrawal of an estimated 20,000 Soviet advisers from Egypt could be a momentous turning point in the Middle East. If carried out, it would substantially reduce the danger of a big power confrontation in the area and dramatically improve the possibilities for an Arab-Israeli settlement.

A possible Egyptian-Soviet rupture was intimated last month by Cairo'e influential editor Mohammed Heikal, who warned that Egypt's friendship with the Soviet Union was being undermined "by overwhelming doubt as to its usefulness, for it would appear that Boviet weapons are either useless or insufficient." Mr. Heikal's warning reflected growing dissatisfaction among the Egyptian military with the quantity and quality of Soviet arms and rising criticism within the country of Egypt's dependence on Moscow.

Although loss of its dominant position in Egypt would be a blow to Soviet influence and prestige throughout the Arab world, military disengagement from Egypt might not be entirely distasteful to the Kremlin. The Russians are known to have been unhappy about President Sadat's periodic threats to renew fighting along the Suez Canal and fearful that he would involve them in a confrontation with the United States. They are said to have warned Syrian Communist leaders that the Arabs could not > Even if the Russians go home, the question remains whether Mr. Sadat will take the next logical steps—to move toward closer ties with the West, particularly the United States, as the Arab states of Sudan and Yemen have recently done, and to eeek a eettlement with Israel through direct or "proximity" negotiations, a course long advocated by some Egyptian officials. The planned revival of United Nations Ambassador Gunnar Jarring'e peace mission next month offers an early opportunity for such a diplomatic initiative, a timely test of Cairo's further intentions.

Iraq: Over Its Own Oil Barrel

Iraq'e thunderbolt gesture of June 1 nationalizing the Iraq Petroleum Co, raised the dual specter of a massive economic squeeze on the most vital of industrial commodities and an ominous pro-Soviet shift in an important region's balance of power. The evidence of the weeks since, however, is that if these painful results are to come about at all, it will not be very soon. On the contrary, Iraq is, so to speak, over its own oil barrel. For lack of oil royalties and foreign exchange, it has had to introduce severe austerity measures. Whether the government in Baghdad can take the strain remains to be seen.

Iraq's problem is in marketing the oil formerly owned (and exported through Mediterranean ports) by IPC, a Western company in which Standard of New Jersey and Mobil have a 23.75 percent share. Local refineries in Syria and Lebanon can take only relative drops. The Russians, who don't pay in hard money anyway, are taking just a few token tanker-loads to demonstrate political solidarity. IPC's threats to move in the courts against buyers of "its" oil have blocked some prospective private deals. Prospective state buvers such as France (an IPC partner), Spain and Italy, though less vulnerable to court actions, have moved toward framework agreements but have not actually bought oil. Libya, which nationalized a small British Petroleum property in a huff a while back, had a similar marketing prohlem and ended up making an unattractive harter deal with the Russians for a fraction of the property's output.

Nor is it only Western oil interests which have resisted. Iraq'e partners in the producers' cartel known as OPEC have warned Baghdad not to discount its oil. The good-

Neighboring Syria. which simultaneously nationalized pipelines carrying Iraq oil to the Mediterranean, is worrying that it may he tougher to get fees and revenues from its Arab brother than it was from evil old IPC. While Egypt can see that the IPC crisis, far from punishing Western supporters of Israel, is sharpening Western-Arab tensions and offering Israel further chance to solidify oil links of its own.

A mediation attempt between Iraq and IPC is to get under way soon. Iraq's purpose is to fix compensation on terms compatible with its economic requirements and its notions of the national dignity. IPC's purpose apparently is to preserve its position. held since Iraq seized the then-undeveloped Rumaila fields a decade ago, that compensation must include provision for loss of future profits from oil still in the ground. The meaning of all this appears to be that the politics of oil are extremely complex and be, cannot detach their separate fortunes and fates. Iraq is indeed over its own oil barrel, but the companies and the world's consumers want the oil.

What Kind of Campaign? By James Reston NEW YORK.—The opening statements from the two the same week, a specific subject like Vietnam or taxes or welfare, sides in the American presidential helps McGovern by giving him election campaign sound more like communiqués from a battlean equal chance to present him-self and his arguments, but why field than reasoned statements shouldn't he have a fair and equal chance? And how else can of future policy. Accordingly, the outlook is that the control of Pennsylvania Avenue over the next four years will be decided once more by the advertising techniques of Madison Avenue, and this raises one or two serious

Do the American people have to tolerate this kind of disorderly process of slick propaganda tricks? After all, they have to fight the wars and pay the taxes and put up with the prices and the unemployment. Are they not at least entitled to demand that the issues of the campaign be discussed by both candidates at roughly the same time, if not debated openly, so that the voters can make sensible comparis and judgments?

These questions are too serious to be left to the candidates. If there is no public demand for a coherent discussion of the issues in the next five weeks before the nomination of President Nixon in late August, it is perfectly clear what will happen, namely that Nixon will discuss his tax or welfare programs in September or October, and Sen. McGovern will talk about the same subjects at some other time, and nobody will quite remember what was said back yonder or put the two programs together for a serious comparison.

Instead of careful discussion about how to get peace in Victoners back home, we will proba-bly get what we have had so far—promises from McGovern to get everybody out by next April, and charges by John Connally or Melvin Laird that this is trresponsible and unpatriotic nonsense, which will not end but respetuate the killing.

Ships at Night

Same goes for discussion of taxes, welfare, and the allocation of future appropriations to mili-tary security abroad or social programs at home. As long as these things are discussed by the two sides weeks spart, the candidates will be like ships passing in the night, and all the mystifying clarifications of press and television later on will not dispel the general confusion among the voters about who is proposing

It has not been possible to get legislation from the Congress that would assure fair and equal time for presentation of presi-dential election issues over the television networks, or to get dis-closure by both parties of the source of the money that buys television time. Nor has it been possible to rule out the vicious 30-second TV political advertisements that appeal to fear and prejudice and mislead the voters. Even so, there are some remedies that minimize, that might minimize, if they do not wips out, the effects of these dirty propaganda tricks. The people, with the help of press, radio and television, cannot compel the candidates to discuss the major issues of the campaign coherently. or force them to debate one another on these issues, but they can, at least, request them to do so, and let the voters judge why they reject a fair open and consecutive discussion of their

It is not too difficult to define what the issues are: How the war should be ended; how the resources of the nation should he spent-how much for military security and how much for the civil unity and security of the American people at home; what kind of tax reform; what kind of health insurance, prison and drug law reform; what kind of Supreme Court, law and order, and civil liberties, including the right of dissent, the power of secret surveillance and the effect

MIAMI REACH.—Sen. George nominee. They were spectacula McGovern has not merely captured a nomination. He has conquered a party.

"American politics will never be quite the same again," Mr. Mc-Govern told his cheering followers in his acceptance speech. That is unquestionably true but the magnitude of the change within the Democratic party depends upon the outcome of the November election. Like other revolutions, this one will have to be proved valid and consolidated on the field of battle against enemies domestic and foreign. If George McGovern defeats Richard Nixon, the forces he vanquished within the Democratic party will have been conclusively defeated and will have to accommodate themselves to the changed situation. If he loses, the pre-1972 status quo will never be restored—the McGovern support-ars are too powerful for that but other elements in the Democratic party will recoup some of their former power. Either way, there will be an accommodation between the old politics and the new. The question is whether it will be on McGovern's terms or those of his adversaries. Who are his adversaries? Why do they resist him? They are chiefly the leadership of the AFL-CIO and many local and state Democratic party organizations. As in any political situation, there are ephemeral, accidental factors. It is only happenstance, for example, that the president of the AFI-CIO is a man who insists upon regarding the Vietnam conflict as a holy war when almost everyons else has abandoned it.

If the head of the AFI_CIO were almost anyone else other than George Meany, organized labor could readily adjust to Mr. Mc-Govern's antiwar views.

Tensions Anyway

Under any probable leadership, however, there would be fundamental tensions between organized labor and the middle-class-youthminority coalition behind Mc-Govern. Most of labor has a hamfisted, meat-and-potatoes approach to politics. It likes politiclans of dependable loyalty on all legislative issues affecting union interests. It wants politiclans who put domestic economic and social welfare issues ahead of what it regards as abstract causes such as civil liberties, institutional reform, or foreign affairs-its own simplistic anti-Communism notwithstanding.

The McGovern coalition, which is loaded up with people promoting causes—peace, women's liberation, abortion, amnesty, re-distribution of income—is naturally anathema to the mion professionals. They feel more comfortable with the machine politicians who strike bargains along predictable lines. They are leery of the kinds of "independent" politicians that McGovern liberals prefer, men like Gov. his keynote address included 'big labor" along with big business and big government among his targets. The party regulars in many Northern cities and states share labor's distaste for the Democratic

Waning Attitudes

These political organizations are built on an ethnic base starting in most cities with the triumvirate of Irish, Italians and Jews and incorporating less numerous European immigrant groups and, more recently, blacks and Puerto Ricans. They reflect socially conservative attitudes. Many of these attitudes are dying out or. al least, are less deeply felt than they were twenty or thirty year: ago. But whether the issue i superficial, such as boye wearing long hair, or serious, such as how patriotism should be expressed politicians adopt a moderately a changing electorate, they would rather err on the side of caution

Mr. McGovern sends shoe. waves through these local politica. organizations. The regulars identify his youthful cadres, often inaccurately, with a permissive life style. They know that his black supporters are jousting at. the local level with ethnic whites in the civil service and in seeking political preferment. They fear that his pro-abortion women supporters may jar some Catholic sensibilities and that his peace activists may upset the American Legion vote.

Union leaders and orthodor politicians may well be out of touch with their own constituencies. But only a McGovern victory can diminish these labo antagonisms and prove these po litical fears unfounded. Only then will it be clear how new the new Democratic party is going to be.

Meanwhile, George McGovern knows that his own volunteers can do the work of registering voters, raising money and getting out the vote that the unions and political machines normally do. He knows too that the way in which he frames the issues and focuses the attack on the Nixon administration will have much more to do with victory or defeat in November than anything George Meany or Chicago Mayor Richard Daley has done, does or

Even if Nixon were to agree

In his early years as a politi-cian Winston Churchill had to suffer just the same sort of misunderstandings, in particular when he crossed the floor of the House and decided to sit, from then on with the Tories. What Mr. Levin is unable to recognize is the sign of greatness in its early stages. There is no question in the minds of a great proportion of people in Britain today that Enoch Powell is the leading political thinker of our times. All of his ideas may not be acceptable to all of the people, but what is understood is that they see before them a man of vision, a man of courage a man of action and a great patriot. Of such is the very stuff of leadership, and of greatness. M. ROSS MACAULAY.

I must protest at Bernard Levin's article about Mr. Enoch

In particular, his cheap jibe that Mr. Powell seized upon the issue of colored immigration as "the perfect populist issue" simply to strike an "answering chord among the general public" is an unworthy and total distortion. Firstly, the question is as burning a one in the U.K. as in the United States and secondly, Mr. Powell'e constituency contains a new generation which is nearly 30% colored. Not only does this give him the right, but also it renders it his duty to represent the profound and legitimate fears of the majority of his English constituents. Of course, in so doing he represents the views of a vest number of other citizens who would otherwise be almost unrepresented in Parliament.

Mr. Powell's April, 1968, speech attacking the misguided immigration policies of successive British governments was endorsed by every opinion poll conducted to discuss separately, but within in the country, the lowest showing about 66% in his favour. Yet, in performing this public service, he has been systematically pilloried by those who, unable to defeat him by reasoned argument, resort to charging him with being vote-catcher

Mr. Powell is, I believe, a more powerful and respected force than your London correspondent; his contribution to this country will far outlive the suide comments for which come modern journalists will be remembered.

Nixon's Theology

The article on "Mr. Nixon's Theology," by the Rev. Charles Henderson of Princeton Univer-sity (IHT, July 5), evokes my comments as a young (23) New Zealander touring Europe. The United States seems full of those who would criticize its leaders. Especially in the universities, a "change-everythingfast" approach is thought to be progress and is often considered sential in all facets of life.

Your writer, with one leg in the church and the other in the university, amugly asserts that Mr. Nixon's values are "anachronistic," "a dying ethic," "not commensurate with the realities of this time." Not only Mr. Nixon, but by implication Billy Graham and the ("fading") majority, are also thrust asids as strangely out of touch with the needs of the modern world.

Is it really correct to encourage the President to exchange his Christian values of old, which have upheld Western nations for hundreds of years, for a new liberal approach, containing the good points of all the world's religions? And whose approach should be used to find the writer's New Religion to find his "most forward and comprehensive values," which will be able to rectify the shortcomings of the old mora values? Would such a New Religion enlist the support of the majority, even if a President were amazement that one reads some of your readers' letters pertaining to Victuam which disclose the degree to which a segment of the American public has become dehumanized by their country's war. These people don't seem to realise that the values which the different administrations have used as justification for the U.S. involvement do not reflect reality. nor that these same values are precisely being perverted by this conflict.

Similarly President Nixon's special envoy to the Danish-American July 4th celebration, Gov. Ronald Reagan, recently caused a stir among the Danish public. During a press conference he surprised journalists by stating that the U.S. was fighting a "savage" uncivilized enamy in Vietnam! Reducing the Vietnamese opponents to something less than human makes it easier to justify the religion to replace a faith which rain of terror which "civilized" American technology is pouring and down on this people who, through history, heve shown a consistent propensity to resist foreign interventions. For it ought to be said that it is not the Vietnamese who have intervened in American affairs, but the other way around.

It may be of interest for those Americans who have the tendency of picturing the war as a struggle against an evil enemyas was the case during the etruggie against Hitlerism—to know that some traditionally pro-American Europeans cannot accept this simplistic line of reasouing and are reaching quite oppo-site conclusions about American methods in Vielnam.

Miraculous Revival In Rome

By Eugenia Sheppard

POME July 19.—Made-to-order fashion has been very ill but just as it seemed to be at death's door, it is reviving quite mirach-lously here. Both Mila School from Milan and Princes Trens Galitzine are showing that best collections in years.

Mila Schon had her fabrics ready but, faced with a weakers ready but, faced with a weakers strike, she was able to start making her collection only six days ago. She was too lived and depressed to make her usual triumphant ritingly appearance after the opening, but it all goes to show that the simplest solution is sometimes the best. The collection may be a little shorter, collection may be a little shorter but the clothes are much less in-tricate and worked over Mile Schon often goes out on a limb with handwork just to prove that she can do it with less detail. The fabrics get more play and the clothes look softer and more appening.

Bashion is cashmere this season There's no doubt about it and Mile Schon has some of the rarest, most expensive from Agnomic Sine base four-ply, double-face cashmere for coats. The skirts of her two-plece dress es, out straight but slightly full, are medium weight and the tuckin shirt tops so thin and bantam weight that they feel like silk. Substitutes

She uses all the dark basic substitutes such as forest green, cherry red and eggplant instead, with an oceasional bright burst. As a switch from winter white, she brings out winter ivory in everything from daytime to formal clothes. Her ivory group has belts of gold and ivory, and ivory jewelry such as the medallion with a gold flower. The craze for ivory jewelry that started right in New York with Else Peretti is sweeping the world. Mila: Schon has many more evening clothes in her collection this season and many more furs and fur trims. Her dresses, mostly shirtwalst types, are made in the same deep colors as the daytime clothes. Many of them are trimmed with puncetto work at the neckline and around the walst. All Mila Schools evening dresses are really elegant sports clothes, such as the bright yellow shirt dress under a little jacket of gun-metal beads. Her fans will ulso be happy with the only long coat in the collection, bright red cashmere, outlined in the black wolf and worn over pleated red georgette.

Mila Schon's coats are divided into two groups, the four-ply check cashmeres and the herringbone tweeds; all in her range of basic colors, and all couble-face and unlined. Her models match their shoes and stockings to the shades of the clothes: Galitzine, the Russian-born

Gainsborough Portrait Sets Record: £280,000

LONDON, July 19 (Reuters). A recently discovered portrait by Thomas Gainsborough was sold for £230,000 ($700,000) at Solikeby's—a record for any English work of art.

The picture, a portrait of the Gravenor family painted in 1748 when the artist was only 21, was put up for sale by two Gravenor descendants, middle-aged sisters who for years had thought it was a fake Gainsborough.

It was bought by a dealer on behalf of a private British collector. The previous record for an English painting was £220,000, paid for George Stubbs "Cheetah with Two Indians" in 1970.

At the opening, Princess Irene was wearing a navy-blue halter top piped in white and slacks cut like jeans, which pretty well sets the mood for the new collection. It's sporty and very much Though many designers have abandoned evening pants this season. Galitzine wears them herself and knows that many women find them comfortable and amusing. Some of her cut velvets are cut slim and are worn with chiffon shirts and velvet vests, but the mat jersies are so full you can hardly tell them from skirts.

As to Mr. Gentele's successor, Mr. Moore said there would be no quick decision, "We're all in shock," he said.
"But Mr. Gentele assembled a team and we will ask them to carry on, on an interim basis," the Metropolitan president added. The Metropolitan executive committee, Mr. Moore said, had been called to meet in an emergency session this afternoon to discuss the situation. "We'll probably appoint a committee to take a long-range look at this thing." Mr. Moore said, referring to the question of Mr.

Appointment Expected

It was learned, however, that Mr. Moore planned to recommend that the board appoint Schuyler Chapin as acting manager. That recommendation no doubt would be accepted.

Lowell Wadmond, the Metropolitan's board chairman, said it was too early to speculate about the succession. "Obviously, though, he will be going ahead with the season as Mr. Gentele planned it."

Mr. Wadmond said Mr. Gentele had been scheduled to return from Europe in the first week of August to start directing rehearsals for the season opener, "Carmen," on Sept. 19. The general manager had recently scored a major triumph by negotiating a new contract with the Met's labor unions and had reportedly impressed union leaders with his knowledge of their problems and his sincerity. Mr. Moore said he had never known any man with a greater capacity for making instant friends.

The Taste of Great, Old Wines

By Jon Winroth PAULLAC, Prance, (HTT).

How good can a century-old bottle of wine be? You can stir up any gathering of wine enthusiasts by bringing up tha subject.

It is true that if a wine, however great, is subjected to a lot of travel, abrupt temperature changes or unsuitable storage, its lifa expectancy will be drastically shortened (except for fortified wines, such as Madeira, port and sherry, but it is the brandy in them which is responsible for durability).

But if it travels little, or better yet, never leaves its original cel-lar, is properly cared for, refilled -sacrificing other wine of the same vintage—and recorked every 25 to 30 years, it may keep a cena richly tannic Bordeaux.

Thanks to Baron Philipps de Rothschild, who extended an invitation through his manager Philippe Cultin, I had the chance, along with three other Americans, to put theory into practice at a tasting hunch at Château Mouton-Rothschild.

Simple Lunch

After a preliminary tasting of the promising 1970 and 1971 from the barrels and a little cham-pagne to clear the palate, the six of us (including Mr. Cottin's assistant, Alain Maurel) sat down to a simple but well-prepared lunch whose sole function was to set off the wines, which must be the despair of the cook whose best efforts are frequently overshadowed by the outstanding col-lection of wines here.

The meal consisted of a truffle omelet, roast duck with vege-tables, avocado and lettuce salad with almost no vinegar in the dressing, cheese and a strawberry sherbet. But my attention was given over completely to what was poured successively into the wine lasses arranged in an upsidedown V in front of my plate, each leg of the V representing a different century's wines. Pirst was a 1961 Château Mouton-Baron-Philippe, a fifth growth of Paulliac, which served as a sort of rinse between the other wines and as a comparison between

The next three wines were served simultaneously: a 1929 Pichon-Longueville (Comtesse de Lalande), a second growth of Paull-lac, a 1926 Chateau Latour and a 1924 Château Margaux, Curiously enough, only the first and youngest of the three, the Pichon-Longueville, was in decline, with a distinctly overripe bouquet and taste. It was the only bottle in which anything remained at the end of the tasting some four hours later. The '29s are generally said to be on their way out after a giorious past, The '26 Latour was powerful rine, with a rich bouquet that opened slowly during the meal, while the 24 Margaux was more elegant and delicate, with a full bouquet of flowers and fruit. Next, at the apex of the V of glasses, was poured a 1900 Cha-Médoc. It still had good color but was becoming very brick-toned while the previous wines had this color only at the rim. There was a touch of overripeness in the bou-quet but it was incredibly fruity and delicate in taste especially for third growth.

Then down the other leg of the V appeared a series of Moutons— 1899, 1895 and 1878. The first was regal and opened gradually into rich wine that was obviously destined to last a long time yet. The second was also rich and still tannic with plenty of fruit, but It was somewhat overshadowed by

Oldest of all, the 1878 Mouton was coffee-colored with a garnetred heart. The houquet was beautifully rich, reminiscent of fine, old leather and the taste was fruity and still tannic with a long finish, although it had been decented an hour before lunch and had now been open for five hours. There was nothing worn out about it, despite its 94 years.

Yet for sheer taste sensation the oldest was not the best. It was a 1921 Chatean d'Yquem, which is thought to be the finest wine Youem, and hence Sauternes, ever made. It is hard to imagine anything more luscious. Despite an amber color darker than old Armagnac, this once white wine was almost fresh, as it all tha flowers and fruits of the earth were exploding in it.

We came down to earth with coffee, and an 1848 cognac sent us off ready to defend the excellence of old wines.

drama. He also identified with theatrical ideas of a sort that caused some suspicious sniffing by traditionalists in the Metropolitan Opera hierarchy. "Young people should come to the opera as they go to hear a pop band," he remarked at the time of his appointment as general manager. "Opera is a folk art, like bull fighting and prize fighting."

Questions Posed by the Death of Gentele

Mr. Gentele's courage demanded admiration. When Rudolf Bing, his predecessor, charted out the 1973-73 season for him, the Swedish newcomer was faced with the prospect of opening his first season safely but lamely with "Tannhäuser," in one of the Met's most faded tion and the executive who has been making most of its major decisions, said last night that "the company will carry on with the whole season just as Mr. Gentele planned it." That specifically would

Gentele would have none of that; he substituted a new produc-tion of "Carmen," with himself as director and Leonard Bernstein conducting. This would have put his head neatly on the block this fall, but Mr Gentele seemed unworried at the danger,

Mr. Gentele's critics—he did not waste much time in developing some—saw in this tendency toward the fresh and untried in opera a soft spot that might be attacked.

Conservative observers of the Met scene were prepared even before he officially took office this month to dismiss his ideas as "sensationalist" and "trendy." They pointed to his most renowned successes as an opera director with his former company, in Stockholm, as evidence: A production of "Un Ballo in Maschera" that portrayed the king as a homosexual and "Aniara," a space-age opera with a partly

Such attention-getting productions, however, were among the very reasons for Mr. Gentele's selection. Not a professional musician himself, he selected the Czech conductor Rafael Kubelik to guide him in that area, Mr. Kubelik is scheduled to assume the position of musical director of the Metropolitan in the 1973-74 season, Mr. Kubelik, like Mr. Gentele, has been known as a proponent of the untraditional in opera, and their teamwork had been expected to produce sparks.

Now, a large question mark hangs over the Metropolitan Opera.

U.S. Factories' Operating Rate Up The operating rate of U.S. factories rose to a seasonally-adjusted 76.7 percept of capacity in the second quarter, the Federal Reserve Board reports, but still was unusually low. The advance was the second in a row, rising from 75.3 percent in the first quarter and 74.8 percent at end-1971.

A high operating rate usually is considered a sign of inflationary strains, while a low one suggests business could produce more if customer demand were large enough. However, some economists question whether the usable but idle capacity is as great as the index shows lately, contending that much of what is measured is old machinery unlikely to be used except in an emergency. The quarter's most pronounced increase was in primary processing industries such as steel where the operating rate rose to 82.8 from 80.3 percent in the first quarter. In ad-

U.S. Moves To Support Dollar Abroad

Fed Intervenes to Back Exchange Rate Accord

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON, July 13 (WP), -The United States took a dra-matic step today to prop up the dollar in world markets and to assure other nations that it would assume a share of the responsibility for maintaining current exchange rates For the first time since last Aug. 15-acting with the approval of President Nixon and Treasury Secretary George Shultz-the New York Federal Reserva intervened aggressively in foreign exchange markets by selling deutsche marks, Dutch guilders and other curren-

As a result, the price of the foreign currencies declined, while the price of the dollar-which had been under pressure-increased to its best levels in weeks.

There was no formal announcement of the Fed's intervention, but it was confirmed by chairman

Arthur F. Burns. "We want to indicate to the world that we want to do our part to maintain the (December) Smithsonian agreement," Mr. Burns said. That agreement created a new set of exchange rates that resulted in an average revaluation of the dollar by 12 percent against major world currencies But recently the British government allowed the pound to float downward from the $2.6 rate set at the Smithsonian, and the question has been raised whether the entire agreement might fall

Unwanted Dollars

One consequence has been that other central banks-notably the Bundesbank-have had to support the Smithsonian system by selling their own currencies in exchange for dollars. They have thus been accumulating bundreds of millions of unwanted dollars, which constitute an inflationary threat to their own banking sys-

European nations have bitterly suggested that the United States is acting as though the defense of the Smithsonian system is the responsibility of everybody except the United States. The Fed's move is an effort to counter that mood and encourage hopes for an eventual long-range reform of the international monetary.

many dollars the New York Fed had acquired today in the pricemaneuver. But he said that "we are poised to continue (intervening) if and when we deem it advisable and on whatever scale we deem advisable "

The U.S. government has two potential resources for foreign exchange operations: The Treasury owns a limited supply of foreign currencies that can be loaned to the Fed; and "swap lines" with other central banks can be activated. "Swaps" are short-term renewable loans of one nation's currency for another, and were used widely prior to last Aug. 15, when the President cut the link between the dollar and gold. American officials were not unanimous on the wisdom of or need for re-instituting swap arrangements. But officials apparently are anxious to maintain cordial relations with other major Western powers, and to take at least one step that would help discourage speculators betting on a new dollar devaluation.

They also hope that the U.S. initiative will discourage any prospect that the Common Market countries might resort to a joint float to stop the inflow of

New Peace Hopes Boost Stocks Dow Index Up 5,

By Vartanig G. Vartan NEW YORK, July 19 (NYT).—A brisk market rally carried prices higher oo the New York Stock Exchange today although the recovery gave ground as the busy session wore on.

The Dow Jones industrial average, ahead by 10 at 11 a.m., slipped to a plus reading of 4.97 at the final bell when it ended at 918.69. A key factor in the rally was the White House announcement only minutes after the market opening that Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's adviser, is bolding secret Vietnam peace talks in

Buyers Rush for Oxy Stock But Analysts Seem Dubious

NEW YORK. July 19 (Reuters).—Occidental Petroleum share prices jumped on the New York Stock Exchange as investors enthusiastically greeted the news of an Oxy deal with the Soviet Union. But oil analysts following Oxy's stock still had some un-answered questions about the agreement and were doubtful that the sharp price rise was justified. The buying was "emotional," was the assessment of Jack Linder, senior oil analyst for Josephthal & Co. Until you are able to evaluate properly the dollars and cents impact of such a project it would be hard to figure on what the 'real' impact would be on Oxy's stock or its earn-

It could be very interesting but must be viewed with some restraint because of the company's past history." he said.

Oxy's stock was a high-priced glamour not too many years ago but fell sharply when the company could not de-liver on some of its promises.

The company's long list of recent problems bas included lower spot tanker rates, a reduction in crude output ordered by the Libyan government, a coal strike and soft demand for its chemicals. It reported a 1971 loss.

Oxy's chairman Armand Hammer gave only a few details of the agreement—a five-year scientific and technical cooperation pact-and declined to put a monetary value on Testifying before the Joint Econamio Committee, Rep. Charles A. "These corporations have done nothing illegal," he said. "They have simply taken advantagequite effectively-of the multitude of tax subsidies which have been enacted into the tax laws over the years."

The congressman's call for tax reform came as the Joint Economic Committee opened three days of hearings on the subject. which has become a key political issue in this election year.

Rep. Vanik said that his calculations of corporate tax avoidance were based on a study of reports required by and on file with the Securitles & Exchange Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as the annual reports of the various corporations to their shareholders.

The five companies that made money last year but paid no income taxes had a total taxable income of $382 million, Rep. Vanik said. The corporations, and the incomes that be attributed to them, are Continental Oil, $109 million; McDonnell Douglas, $144.8 million; Gulf & Western Industries, $51.4 million: Aluminum Co. of America, $50.2 million: and Signal Cos., $26.9

One of the greatest irritations in bridge arises when an opponent makes a bid or play that by sheer chance turns out to be a sensational success. The irritated victim on the diagramed deal was Sam Stayman of New York, inventor of the Stayman convention. He was playing in St. Louis with Mike Ledeen, who is also well-known as a bidding theorist.

The partnership was using Stayman's latest brainchild, a strong, artificial, forcing one-diamond bid. North's two-heart reply was positive, showing a heart suit and a hand including at least two top cards, i.e., aces and kings.

The remainder of the auction followed conventional lines. The jump to three spades fixed spades as the trump suit and asked North to define his spade holding. Four spades guaranteed possession of the acc.

GIVE BIRTH TO BRIGHTNESS

A Thematic Study in Neo-Black Literatus
By Sherley Anne Williams. Dial. 252 pp. 1615

EAT OF ME, I AM THE SAVIOR By Arnold Kemp. William Morrow. 244 pp. 463

Reviewed by Mel Watkins

DURING the last few years, questions concerning the pertinence of black literature to the black community have been hotly debated, along with the possibility of establishing a visible criterion for judging that literature. Various writers and critics have suggested theories of a "black aes-thetic," but generally these theories have eschewed aspects of form and have focused on the themes and subject matter treated by black authors. Consequently, rather than providing strictly aesthetic guidelines, they have usually offered what might more properly be termed a theory of black sensibility—a significant accomplishment in itself. As it is further refined, this theory may obviate discussion of a separate aesthetic dealing with form. Sherley Anne Williams's "Give Birth to Brightness" is a book that should give more impetus to that development. It is a survey of black fiction from the 19th century to the present, but it focuses on those contemporary works that the author labels "neo-black" writing. According to Miss Williams, neoblack writing is characterized by debunking of art-for-art's sake; by its authors' insistence upon addressing themselves to a. black readership, and by their attempt to "define themselves and their people in images which grow out of their individual quests and group exploration. Selected works of Imamin Amiri Baraka (LeRol Jones), James Baldwin and Ernest J. Gaines are analyzed in depth as Miss Wil-

Neo-black writing (which she depicts as part of a continuum growing out of the poetry of Phillis Wheatley, the slave narratives, and the novels of the 19th-centmy writers such as William Wells Brown) provides the authorwith examples of the variegated roles and images of the black hero. In examining specific works of Baraka, Baldwin and Gaines, she illuminates similarities in their perceptions of some archetypal figures in black life (the or streetman and the musician) and she compares how these figures in fiction struggle to vrest some sense of manhood from their interaction with the white world and particularly the white woman. Despite some over-generalizations, Miss Williams persuasively demonstrates the commonality of viewpoint that she asserts characterizes neobiack fiction, Moreover, street life is about.

But while the book's analytical foundation is convincing, the final theoretical edifice has its tracks. The streetman may function as rebel and black hero in literature, as Miss Williams points out; by flouting the mainstream (white) society's values and laws he provides visible symbolic resistance to its oppressive forces and counteracts the image of Lewis, 233 1/2 absorbing his fifth defeat in 31 bouts, was an easy target for Ali's jab. But he obviously wasn't intimidated by All's fame. As early as the second round, All disdained his ballerina style, presumably in the hope of an early knockout. But hig Blue not only survived the assault, he traded punches.

Through the 10th, each round was like another, Ali landing sharply but without much sting, Lewis fishing back occasionally. In the 11th, All resumed his dance. But by this time Lewis was wobbling, prompting the charity of the referee, the editor of Boxing Illustrated Magazine. Lewis later spoke of Ali's "edu-cated left hand," the primary punch in the 30-year-old former

UCLA's Nater Quits Olympics: McMillen Named

NEW YORK. July 19 (NYT).-Swen Nater, who fought out of obscurity as a substitute behind Bill Walton, the all-American center from the University of California, Los Angeles, to be named to the Olympic basketball team, quit the squad yesterday at its training base in Honofulu. Tom McMillen, the 6-foot-11-inch Maryland star, who had criticized the selection committee when it left him off the team, was named as Nater's replacement.

The 6-11 Nater, born in the Netherlands, asked for an invitation to the trials at the Air Force Academy, although he had not been originally chosen. He became one of the leading scorers at the tryout camp. According to Bill Summers, the Olympic basketball chairman, Nater refused to work out with the team Monday.

"He checked off the pluses and minuses and decided to go home." Summers said. Hank Iba, coach of the team, said. "It's the first time someone bas come this far and quit."

McMillen, who had been bypassed after averaging 15.1 points and &3 rebounds during the trials, said: "I always wanted to play in the Olympics. I don't look on this as making up for my previous disappointment, although in a way I guess it does."

What Matters to Paul Gallico

LONDON, July 19 (IHT).—Paul Gallico was once invited to address the Rion Literary Society, the first American writer to be so honored. His title, baffling to his hosts, was "How to Achieve a Literary Career from a Reclining Position," and it was, says Mr. Gallico, "the first time anyone ever spoke to those kids on something interesting."

The reclining position which led to a thriving career as one of today's most popular and prolific writers was the result of a smashing blow by Jack Dempsey. Anicipating George Plimpton by some 30 years. ("I started it, George Plimpton made a career of it"). Paul Gallico became a popular sportswritter not only by getting into the ring with Dempsey ("I'd never had gloves on before, it was sheer experiment") but by playing golf with Bobby Jones, tennis with Vinnie Richards, rac-ing in Gar Wood's speedboat and by swimming against Johnny Weismuller and Eleanor Holm. In 1936, after 14 years of journalism, Paul Gallico chucked it and turned to fiction. "I was scared to death."

he says. Next week Mr. Gallico celebrates his 75th birthday and the festivities begin today with a Foyle's literary luncheon in London the has already been given two Foyle's luncheons, a record, and once stood in at 15 minutes notice for an ailing Ogden Nash, writing a Nash-style poem during the entrée). On his birthday, July 26. Mr. Gallico will fence the is a nimble épée man). "That's pure vanity, arrogance, whetever you like," he says. "Then I'm going to take my wife and step-daughter to a smashing dinner some place."

Tall, bifocaled and inevitably described in interviews as burly, Paul Gallico looks estonishingly young, with dark hair that he quickly points out is natural his father didn't go gray until he was past 80. He wears a white turtieneck with whimshal cats and daisles appliqueed by his attractive fourth wife, Virginia and he talks pleasantly, easily. He has neither the time nor the inclination for introspection and for so popular a writer he is remarkably without side. The guests he chose to invite to the Foyle's luncheon were 12 small, excited children with whom he has been in correspondence for some

Mr. Gallico has written children's books. short stories (the most famous being, of course, "The Snow Goose"), novels on such varied subjects as a boxing kangaroo and life on an ocean liner that has turned upside down, movie scripts, including that starred George Sanders as a swellheaded New York reporter who comes to Paris and gets his comeuppance at the hands of the Herald Tribune staff (despite its entrancing theme it was says Mr. Gallico, a flop), and a biography of Saint Patrick written while he was wearing what he describes as a portable gallows after surgery for a pinched nerve. He works daily, constantly

"I am never between books. I have one in the shop and one on the runway. I'm terrified if I don't have one coming up, I think I'm drying up." His next book, for Christmas, is called "Honorable Cat" and consists of poems and cat photographs by a Japanese photographer.

Despite the fact that he has lived in Antibes since 1959 (he also has a London mews house) Paul Gallico has never had many French fans. The French are realists and my stories are fairy tales," he says. "The French stopped reading fairy tales with Perrault." He doesn't think much of literary reputation or immortality: what matters most to him is that most of his books are still in print

"I have a lovely library, I have all the classics. No one reads them anymore, they're out of fashion. Who reads Thackeray today, who reads H.G. Wells?

"You can't, if you're a professional, stop to evaluate yourself as a success or not a success. I'm too goddam busy. Any writer who thinks he'e hot stuff is turks. That's what was the matter with Hemingway. He thought he was great and he wasn't all that great I'm not one of the great literary figures of all times, but I'm a good journeyman writer who gives pleasure to a lot of people."

Mr. Gallico cares enormously about his readers; his instinct for reader contact is, he feels, a hangover from his reporting days at the New York Daily News. "You start off as a novelist you have no contact with your resders at all Working with the news you have contact and reaction. I would write my column at 3 o'clock and et 7 the pink edition would go out and at dinner someone would say, 'Gee Paul, that was a load of crap you wrote."

A top sportswriter's life with its high pay and instant celebrity was seductive but Paul Gallico quit while he was shead. didn't want to be known as Paul Gallico veteran sportswriter," he says. "Grantland Rice—good old Grannie, I didn't want to be good old Paulie."

He researches his books very carefully and is most methodical "I need research, a synopsis, character sketches and scene sketches. Then if I've done my homework properly, the writing is sheer bliss. If my synopsis is right, then the people behave In the right way."

Paul Gallico agrees with critics who call him seutimental. "I see nothing wrong with sentiment. The young are sentimental in their way, it's just taken a different form." He doesn't argue with critics but is deeply hurt by the fact that The New York Times doesn't trouble to review his books ("I would rather be murdered by them than ignored"). For all his success, he keeps remembering the pile of rejected manuscripts that still clutter his agent's office:

Two got a pile of unpublished material that I'm saving for the next person who says you can publish anything. It's not ned because it's lousy. The fact that I'm Paul Gallico and wrote. The Snow Goose' doesn't mean a thing."

At 75, Paul Gallico says he feels as if he were 23 or 24, though his earliest memory is the return of Adm. Dewey from Manila His view of himself is level-

"If I have any sort of thing, it's I am a professional I'm a writer. When I fill out a customs form I say writer, not suthor. I hate the word author. I'm a professional writer and I'll write you a novel, a short story, a bit of doggerel, a screenplay, an article. Whatever comes into the puriteu of my professional life I'll do some things better, some worse, but I'll do it professionally." On the wall of Paul Gallico's London house hangs Peter Scott's painting of "The Snow Goose." This 54-page story, published in 1941, remains his most famous work; "I'm inned to it, I'm tired of it the way Erich Maria Remarque got tired of 'All Quiet on the Western Front,' I've written better books, but it had a meaning at the time it appeared. It's almost humiliating to be remembered for a short story, but it doesn't matter.

"What does matter," Paul Gallico says, "is the entertainment I can provide today.
What matters isn't what I did, but what I am and what I am going to be-I am at this moment, and what I am looking forward to."

republic of, not the goddess, whose political, if not physical, existence is being challenged by Tamiz'ahua Tupon IV, the 350-pound king of Tonga. The IHT's mid-Pacific correspondent, John Forbis, sends an updating situa-tioner (understandably delayed) on the two, sea-washed coral reefs, barely visible at low tide, straddling the Tropic of Capricorn about 179 degrees West lon-gitude. Noting that Tongs, 260 miles northeast of the reefs, has reacted adversely since the Ocean Life Research Foundation of New York and London claimed the spot with the intention of setting up a sovereign nation of Minerva by reclaiming land and creating an island on it, Forbis goes on to report: "The first Tongan expeditionary force, led by the king, reached Minerva about the first of June. The king was reinforced by the minister of police, a contingent of "defense" personnel and a force of convict laborers. For several days, according to a correspon-dent in Suva, Piji, the laborers worked presumably hip-deep in sea water at building two 10-by-20-foot islands upon the reefs. One convict was reportedly murdered during the construction. King Taufs'ahua Tupou IV then sailed back to his capital of Nukualofa to proclaim Tonga's

"Meanwhile, the plot thickened when the nominal president of the Republic of Minerva, Murris Davis of Orange, Californis, showed up ir. Nukualofs. with a proposition for the Tongan government. No one knows exactly what the proposition was since Davis was never granted an audience. News reports, which filter hesitantly out of the Pacific islands, indicate that "President" Davis carried with him a film outlining the Republic of Minerva's plans to build a sea-city for 10,000 persons on the reef. It is not clear whether Davis screened his film during his stay on the island.
